PACKING THE COURT

By EDMUND CONVERSE
Sketches by PHIL NESBITT

MORE COURT PACKING

The Supreme Court problem is still giving the country a headache and well it might because it is rapidly approaching the proportions of a national campaign. In his speech at the hundred-dollar-a-plate dinner President Roosevelt finally dropped the screen that has poorly attempted to hide the reason for the administration's proposal to "pack" the court. No longer must "We, the people—" add to the court to aid the poor old guys in giving us speedy justice and themselves more time in the sunshine. We must "now" add to the court because of its failure to keep up with the times, to make its interpretation of the Constitution similar to the New Deal's view, to keep the Ohio and Mississippi rivers within bounds by its decisions, to keep in line with Congress at this time of great crisis. It all sounds swell especially when expounded by radio's number one broadcaster.

The great danger facing the country today is the evident failure of the majority of its citizens to analyze just what is at stake in this Supreme Court packing problem. Shorn of all appendages of politics, age of members, and personal appeals by none other than the President of the United States the bare fact remains that the choice is whether we continue with our government of constitutional democracy or whether we take the first step in mass delegation of all the rights and guarantees reserved to us by our Constitution and permit the whole to be administered from without. A test case cannot be made. We cannot allow a packing of the court and then later unpack it if we don't like it. It is similar to an emergency tax bill, once the tax is imposed the emergency never stops. Once the Supreme Court is relegated to limbo, is in essence a puppet of the power that appointed it, is is conceivable that that power will stand by and see a Supreme Court with a real constitutional function once more created? When cabinet officers, administration leaders in congress, chiefs and captains of government agencies blare radio pleas to the people in behalf of judicial reorganization it would pay to cut the chaff from the wheat and see what the blare is about. It definitely should NOT be a question of whether to support the President or not.

The unfortunate part of the whole mess is that the people are well under way to being scared not to support the administration's desire. The idea has been put across that the present court composed of "tory," reactionary, Hoovercratic ideals is waiting like the wolf of Red Riding Hood to pounce on some more Roosevelt benefactions to the people. Else why the hurry, why the rush to do all this court packing? Before last election we were well on the road to recovery, all thanks to the New Deal. Now we are at a terrible crisis. A crisis that will not wait on the usual processes of our government to act but necessitates a major operation on that government.

Another interesting speculation concerning the proposed Bill is this: What will the President do if the Bill becomes law? Will six additional members on the court maintain any semblance of independent legal thought when interpreting the Constitution or will they go into a caucus and see what the White House says? Will they be asked to give an opinion on the various proposed social acts before appointment to the supreme bench or will they be appointed and then ordered how to hold? Does it not seem foolish to appoint six more members who might turn out as "cussed," from an administration point of view, as the present nine. It would seem then that we really do not need the Bill at all. If the six appointees are to do what the White House says then they are surely unnecessary expense and a wiser Bill would merely propose permanent Supreme Court adjournment. If the six appointees will be free thinkers, then by some awful chance they might agree with the present nine or enough of the present nine to hold an act of the administration unconstitutional and we would be right back where we started. Of course the proponents of the proposed packing plan claim that the Supreme Court is already packed; packed by past tory chief executives who appointed Justices to suit their views and that since the present chief executive has had no chance to appoint as yet he should be given an opportunity to even up matters. As a matter of fact the appointments in the past have been absolutely non-political in character and choice has been based on knowledge of law alone. Stone and Cardozo, whom the present administration single out for admiration, were appointed by President Coolidge and Hoover while the chief bugaboo of New Deal Acts, Justice McReynolds, was appointed by none other than that great liberal, Woodrow Wilson. Justice Butler was a staunch Democrat but was appointed by Harding.

So it can be seen that if we have a "controlled" Court we really need no court at all, for constitutional purposes; while if we merely add to the number along the old individual-freedom-of-thought idea we cannot tell how the new members might act in a pinch and we might as well struggle along with the present nine. Undoubtedly a "fireside chat" will iron out all the difficulties but until such time as that takes place let's all get out the grammar school history and look up the Constitution and see what it really reserves to US, the people, and see what fence exists between our continued enjoyment of those rights and government interference, no matter how wise, beneficial paternalistic, or necessary at the moment that interference seems. We shall find that the Bill of Rights is just as much part of the Constitution as the Article pertaining to the Judiciary and if we throw one out the window the other may jump out after it. We have it now but if we give it away we lose it forever and it is the most precious possession of every free American. Regardless of race, creed, or religion the perilous times all over the world today make us all glad to be citizens of this country and it is only due to our real democratic form of government, of which our Constitution is the foundation rock that has safeguarded us from the revolutions, turmoils and bloodshed of Europe. Let us not jeopardize what we have on any pretext whatsoever, because the hidden dangers behind this Supreme Court Bill far overcome its few apparent advantages.

"Help Yourself" Today

"Help Yourself," which comes to the Sunset School Auditorium, Carmel, under the sponsorship of The Carmel Pine Cone, is a fast moving three-act comedy of today, clean, sensible and full of hilarious fun. It will arrive for two performances on the evenings of March 17 and 18.

The principal character, Christopher Wyatt, not only helps himself, but, through his efforts, helps the banking firm which he decides to adopt. The humorous situations developed during the action of this play reach a fine point of good natured satire when this wide awake American, desperate in his plight of unemployment, enters the office of this institution and helps himself to an executive position, the laughs begin.

Extremely interesting characters are projected as the tale unfolds, dealing with dizzy finance and a fine romance between the younger individuals in the play.

It is understandable why this play has been an international success, playing nineteen weeks in New York City and coming here direct from the Federal Theatre Project's Musart Theatre in Los Angeles where it was highly successful.

Written by Paul Vulpius, the Viennese, and translated by John J. Coman, the play is directed by Ralph Cloninger, and boasts of such Federal players as Peter Brocco, Paul Reyner, Patricia Robin Craig, Carroll Borland, Kingsley Benedict, Arthur Wellington and Lyle Clement.

Mr. Frederick Peabody was host at a luncheon Sunday at the Cypress Point Country Club. His guests were Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Lapham, and Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon Boocock.

MAN BITES DOG

By MYRON BRINIG

"Will you please," writes a correspondent who signs him or herself L. M. G. "tell us something about your life?"

* * *

Well, L. M. G. very little of interest has happened in my life. Most of my time is spent in a cork-lined room littered with papers and manuscripts of all descriptions and at night I have the most terrifying attacks of asthma and epilepsy. Immediately after one of these attacks I write six more chapters on a new novel to be twenty-five volumes in length. By morning I'm a little tired, but not too worn out to write six more chapters before my breakfast which consists of a quinine tablet in a tumbler of absinthe.

* * *

You ask whether I am married. Certainly not. There isn't room in my bed for anything except my daschund Kelly and my manuscript. Kelly leaves me every morning to gather material. He comes home every evening with an old bone, six sea shells and a mouse. I love to pet the mouse until it dies. Of late years my only diversion has been petting mice until they die. I wish more people in the world would pet mice. Mice and old men. I love to pet old shoes, too. It relaxes me no end.

* * *

You ask whether I've ever been in love. Yes, once. I was in love with my shetland pony. I was only five at the time. But one day my pony fell in love with another pony and soon three ponies were kicking up their heels about the old plantation. I couldn't ride all three ponies at once, so my father had to give all of them away. I was broken hearted until my father brought home a mouse for me to pet. Soon that mouse had another mouse and that mouse had others, and bye and bye there were thousands of mice around for me to pet. That's how I learned about music by petting mice. They make little musical sounds when you pet them, like tra-la-la and de-de-da. And that's how I came to write my symphony in D Major. It's a very mice piece.

* * *

Do I find life much different since success has come to me? Well, frankly, yes I do. I have more money for chocolate ice cream sodas now. I have at least six ice cream sodas a day now where before I could only afford one, at the most, two. Ice cream sodas make me nice and fat, and now that I'm successful, I don't mind being fat. Before, when I was poor the minute I got fat, people would say, "What a lazy good-for-nothing, eats all day and never works." Now they say, "What a nice, comfortable fat man he is. So jolly and full of fun and ice cream sodas. I love fat men. They're worth their weight in gold." Maybe some day, dear L. M. G. I'll get to weigh 250 pounds so I can be worth two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. But it'll take an awful lot of ice cream sodas.

* * *

Yes indeed, L.M.G., I've found my rock. Now you find yours. But be sure it's a rock without a flaw and has a nice platinum setting.

Saturday afternoon Mrs. John Douglas Short dispensed hospitality at her house at 13th and Dolores Streets. Those who called during the afternoon were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Williams, Mrs. Libby Ley, Miss June Oppen, Miss Irene Alexander, Mr. Pierre Collinge, Mr. Phil Nesbitt Mr. Jerry Hasty, Mr. Frank Work, Mr. Jack Williamson and Mr. John Duffy.

Auxiliary Shows Fashions

Appropriately garbed in a spectator sports costume and a town ensemble are Mrs. A. E. Sparks and Miss Marjorie Lee Davis. .....

One of the Auxiliary members in charge of the Fashion Show who will also act as a model is Mrs. Edwin Ewig, pictured here with Mrs. Willard Whitney who will also show what the well-dressed woman of the Spring of 1937 will wear.

Miss Margaret Tickle and Mrs. Thomas Mulvin enhance the smartness of their cocktail costumes.

If you would be correctly attired for active sports you should emulate these pretty twins. Miss Ellen Brown ready for a morning canter and Miss Jessie Brown prepared to make a hole in one.

The show, the second to be staged by the Auxiliary, will be held in the American Legion clubrooms Thursday night.

Mrs. P. A. McCreery and Miss Happie Whyte modeling the most attractive and comfortable sort of kimono.

Mrs. Edward Kuster, Mrs. Elizabeth Mathews Lunde and Miss Eva Loubens drove to Berkeley one day last week to attend the 20th anniversary of the founding of Williams Institute of which they are graduates. They reported that Dr. Alfred Adler will lecture at the school in the fall.
